Liberian chemist reflects on trauma of 2014 arrest

Looking back. Vickson and Lorpu Korlewala were thrown in jail on charges of robbery in 2014, which were later dropped.

Vickson Korlewala at his office. Inset: the surveillance photo that caused the case of mistaken identity. / CHARLES MOSTOLLER

"I thought it was a joke."

Sitting in his office behind his wife's hair salon in West Philadelphia, Vickson Korlewala is going over their arrest on robbery charges a year ago — charges that, he claims, were baseless.

He says that police evidence — surveillance images of the robbery — shows a suspect who does not resemble him, except for the color of their skin.

The charges were eventually dropped over a technicality, and expunged with no opposition from the DA's office.

But that doesn't erase the weeks in jail spent by Vickson, 58, and his wife Lorpu, 50, both immigrants from Liberia, or the months of trial dates with robbery charges hanging over them.

"When I realized that it was not a joke, that I was in jail, it was the most fearful thing that ever happened to me in my life. Because it was wrong," Korlewala said. "I've never been arrested in my life. I could see my whole future just went blank."

Korlewala described the indignity of the April 1, 2014, arrest and incarceration as traumatic. He said he and his wife were threatened by police officers during the interrogation, and were both intimidated by other inmates in jail.

The alleged crime was the robbery of an elderly woman who was forced to withdraw thousands of dollars from her account at a Citizens Bank by a male and female duo driving a green SUV. The victim was pushed out of the robbers' car around the corner from Lorpu's hair salon, near 55th and Market streets.

Then, a day later, the Korlewalas were charged with a second, similar robbery of an elderly woman in Old City that had occurred two months earlier.

At least one victim identified the Korlewalas as the robbers — but surveillance images from the Citizens Bank robbery don't resemble him.

The charges were dropped in September 2014 because prosecutors failed to present new line-up identifications, and the charges were expunged one year after the original arrest.

For Korlewala, his arrest is a sad testament to flaws in the justice system, he said.

"There's so many young kids in jail, so many don't have the money to come out," he said. "What would happen if they did this to someone who didn't have that support system?"

No word from arresting officers

Korlewala never filed an Internal Affairs complaint, but has a pending motion seeking the return of possessions seized during the arrest — including his and Lorpu's cellphones and cash they had on them. He also has an attorney who has been advising him on a potential lawsuit over the arrest.

- The officers who arrested Korlewala could not be reached for comment on the case.
- "If this individual thinks something inappropriate was done, we have a process for investigating misconduct, and that's through Internal Affairs. He has to file a complaint. We are very accommodating of anyone who wants to file a complaint," said Lt. John Stanford of the Philadelphia Police Department.

Quoted

"We can't have these officers on the streets. These guys really should not be doing this kind of job. It's heartbreaking to see that the justice system is like this."

Yuck it up. 'Delco Proper' to stream on ComedyCentral.com

If you ever wanted to know how to tell a joke at a funeral, a new Web show set in Delaware County might be for you.

"Delco Proper," which debuted on Comedy Central's website Monday, depicts three best friends from a rough, blue-collar neighborhood in Pennsylvania who struggle to avoid trouble and make a name for themselves in a city where the odds are stacked against them.

The first episode, mixes the intentional awkwardness of "Silver Linings Playbook" with the bawdy humor of "It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia."

It's set at a funeral for a high school classmate, where actors Tim Butterly, John McKeever and Tommy Pope go to settle old scores.

The show gets that Delco accent down pat — along with that mildly aggressive, blissfully self-unaware attitude we've come to know and love.

It's brought to you from the folks at Deer Prom.

You can check out the NSFW trailer online at Metro.us.

Game changer

McNabb's broadcasting gigs imperiled after arrest

Former Eagles quarterback Donovan McNabb has been suspended indefinitely from his broadcasting gig on Fox Sports following his arrest for driving under the influence in Arizona.

McNabb, 38, was arrested on suspicion of drunk driving June 28 after he rear-ended another vehicle at a traffic light in Gilbert, Arizona. There were no reported injuries, but it was his second DUI in 18 months.

The former Eagle, Viking and Redskin appears as a color commentator on Fox Sports Live. He also appears on NBC radio.

NBC said McNabb is taking a leave of absence for personal reasons.

The suspension was first reported by Sports Illustrated. DAN KELLEY

Feds: AC cop hid cash for drug dealer beau

Kiyia Harris / LINKEDIN

Dirty dealings. Atlantic City Police Sgt. Kiyia Harris accused of making false statements to FBI over transactions she made for her boyfriend.

A sergeant in the Atlantic City Police Department has been accused of lying to the FBI over financial transactions she made on behalf of her boyfriend, a convicted drug dealer.

Kiyia Harris, 39, allegedly deposited $33,000 cash into her bank account in increments of less than $10,000 to avoid mandatory reporting requirements by banks. That money was used to buy her boyfriend — who was identified only as D.W. in court documents — a 1969 Camaro.

When FBI agents questioned Harris over the source of the funds, Harris said she never deposited cash. Federal prosecutors said Harris actually deposited $120,000 in cash into her account between 2007 and 2014.

The case unfolded after narcotics officers investigating Harris' boyfriend followed a car involved in a cocaine purchase to a home Harris shared with her boyfriend in Egg Harbor Township.

Meet the man behind Detective Boogaloo

Jamar Nicholas, 42, is a West Philly native and current resident of the Oak Lane neighborhood who grew up aspiring to be a cartoonist. He currently pens "Hip-Hop Cop" for Metro.

"I've never wanted to do anything else," he said. Metro caught up with Nicholas to hear about his outlook on the world of comics.

What is the genre of your work?
Detective Boogaloo is basically a hip-hop soap opera. That scratches one of my creative itches, because I'm a Philly kid who grew up in the '70s in the beginning of hip-hop, so this is my love letter to hip-hop that mixes that in, and also outrageous characters with superpowers. You can kind of think of it like a hip-hop version of Dick Tracy.

Cartoonist Jamar Nicholas opens up to Metro about the world of comics and his response to critics of his work. / PROVIDED

Making comics

Nicholas adapted Geoffrey Canada's famed memoir "Fist Stick Knife Gun" into a graphic novel, and expects to publish "Leon: Protector of the Playground" this fall. He also works as an adjunct professor at Drexel University, Moore College of Art and Design and Arcadia University.

- Currently, Nicholas' is publishing "Detective Boogaloo: Hip-Hop Cop," a neo-noir serialized comic strip that is being printed right here in Metro (see page 19). It's a story set in 2002 about a break-dancing detective investigating a rapper named "Ice Tre," who resembles Nelly.

Why are you publishing it one strip a day?
To me, it's definitely a challenge … you have this really small space every day to tell a story — and end it on something interesting. Also, not all comics have a punchline at the end. I enjoy the challenge of creating stories that are funny in a different way than you're used to reading.

Has working as a black cartoonist caused more challenges for you?
I've tried to live my life thinking that not everything is going to work for all people and you just need to keep throwing things at the wall until something sticks.

I've seen that thought process bury people — 'Oh, they're holding me back.' It haunts people into submission. Or they say, "That's something I can't approach so I'm not going to try." I'm not going to think in those terms.

Some readers said Detective Boogaloo has stereotypical images of African-Americans. Your response?
If you open up the Metro to my comic and see a rapper with a gold chain, you could say, 'Where are the positive images?' wherein you're reacting to a character with a unique voice in a bigger story. There is balance in my work.

I've done work about anti-bullying and positive black images. It offended me to think that someone would believe I would do something so negative and put it out into the world.

Everybody has an opinion. I just hope you give it a chance. … My work is like that, you just have to ride with it for a little bit.

Diversity in comics

The Black Panther film is set for release in 2018. What do you think about the state (or lack) of mainstream black superheroes?
One of the battle cries of comic book fans is people of color aren't represented in mainstream comics — when are we going to get this?

If you're waiting for Disney, this huge mega-corporation to pander to you, you might be waiting for a long time. You're waiting for your favorite superhero to be black suddenly? I know scores of artists who have comics about black heroes. Why don't you check that out? There are new voices that are trying to get you to hear them.

Greece faces tough conditions under deal

Europe. If Greece's third bailout had failed, Athens would have been staring into an economic abyss.

Eurozone leaders made Greece surrender much of its sovereignty to outside supervision on Monday in return for agreeing to talks on an 86 billion euro bailout to keep the nearly bankrupt country in the single currency.

Just hours after the deal was settled in marathon all-night talks, doubts were already emerging about whether left-wing Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras would be able to hold his government together long enough to implement any bailout.

The terms imposed by international lenders led by Germany in talks at an emergency summit obliged Tsipras to abandon promises of ending austerity and could fracture his government and cause an outcry in Greece.

"Clearly the Europe of austerity has won," Greek Reform Minister George Katrougalos said.

"The agreement was laborious, but it has been concluded. There is no Grexit," European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker told a news conference after 17 hours of bargaining.

He dismissed suggestions that Tsipras had been humiliated even though the summit statement insisted repeatedly that Greece must now subject much of its public policy to prior agreement by bailout monitors. REUTERS

Five things you

1 Obama commutes 46 prison sentences, still shy of estimates

President Barack Obama reduced the prison sentences of 46 inmates on Monday, bringing the commutations he has granted to a total of 89, a number still far shy of the thousands his administration originally estimated it would make.

Obama has said reforming the complex U.S. criminal justice system to reduce the number of people serving long sentences for nonviolent drug crimes is one of the top priorities for his remaining time in office.

"Their punishments didn't fit the crimes," Obama said of those whose sentences he commuted in a video statement on Monday.

Obama said he hoped to work with a bipartisan group of lawmakers on criminal justice reforms, but so far, legislative fixes have stalled in Congress.

With only 5 percent of the world's population, the United States accounts for about 25 percent of the world's prison population, according to the American Civil Liberties Union.

The Justice Department launched a program in April 2014 to systematically identify prisoners serving time for crimes they were sentenced for under laws that have since been changed to carry less severe punishments. Traditionally, presidents have granted pardons or commutations on a one-off basis.

2 'Heading' bans in soccer may not be enough to stop concussions

Outlawing "heading the ball" during soccer games may reduce the rate of concussions, but eliminating player-on-player contact would help more, suggests a new study.

The findings challenge recent calls to ban "heading," which is when players hit soccer balls with their heads, the study's lead author told Reuters Health.

"Intuitively, it sounds great," said Dawn Comstock of the Colorado School of Public Health at the University of Colorado Anschutz Medical Campus in Aurora. "It even has the word 'head' in it."

Austin cop placed on leave for fatal shooting

An Austin, Texas, police officer has been placed on administrative leave after fatally shooting a suspect who was trying to flee and appeared to be reaching for a weapon, police said.

Police said they had received a complaint that a man in his 60s had been stalking a woman.

"Officers instructed him to place his hands behind his back, at that point the suspect took off and fled running. As he is running, it can be seen on the officer's in-car camera that he is reaching into the back of his shorts, grabbing for an item," said Austin Assistant Police Chief Brian Manley. REUTERS

Race on to develop 'pot Breathalyzer'

As cannabis bans are relaxed in more U.S. states, the race is on to develop an instant roadside Breathalyzer for police to test drivers who may be taking the "high" road.

Vancouver-based Cannabix Technologies Inc., founded by a retired Royal Canadian Mounted Police officer, expects to be first out of the gate with a "pot Breathalyzer" — a handheld device similar to those used to detect alcohol.

Cannabix won't give an estimate of when its product might go on sale, but it has a prototype undergoing in-house testing. REUTERS

Porn police. Miami cop under investigation related to porn past

An eight-year veteran Miami police officer is under investigation related to her past as a porn star.

Sabine Raymonvil, 30, who admitted to appearing in pornographic films before becoming a police officer, appeared in graphic films with a convicted rapist, New York Daily News reports.

Raymonvil was featured in some clips with porn businessman Emerson Callum and cameraman Lavont Flanders — who was also a former police officer.

The two were convicted in 2012 of drugging and raping women who auditioned to be in their porn videos, according to Local 10. Both are serving life sentences.

Raymonvil told Local 10 she has not worked in the adult film industry since she became a police officer. She refused further comment noting the ongoing investigation.

According to IMDB, Raymonvil also appeared in two short films, "Aurora" and "Collapse."

There is no direct rule that forbids Miami police officers from working in the porn industry.

Hillary Clinton presents economic vision in NYC

Proper pay. Presidential candidate Clinton emphasizes the need for fair wages.

Former secretary of state and current Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Rodham Clinton presented her economic plan in a talk Monday morning at the New School in New York City, emphasizing the need for fair wages and focusing on economic impacts that will have long-term growth to help working families.

"If you do your part, you will reap the rewards," Clinton said to cheers and applause. "We won't leave anyone behind."

Clinton entered the presidential race this spring, setting up her headquarters in Brooklyn Heights. She gave her first campaign speech in June on Roosevelt Island.

"Over the past few months, I've heard Americans' concerns about an economy that's still not delivering for them — it's stacked for those at the top," Clinton said.

Clinton said increasing wages is pivotal for helping hard-working Americans to achieve a middle-class life.

"That will be my mission from the first day I'm the president to the last," Clinton said.

Other key pledges included raising the minimum wage, supporting small business, universal pre-K, refinancing student debt, support for women in the workforce and Wall Street reforms.

1 50 Cent now in da bankruptcy club

Looks like there will be a lot fewer visits to the candy shop for 50 Cent. The "P.I.M.P." rapper filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection Monday, according to the Wall Street Journal. Fiddy is apparently swamped by debts ranging from $10 million to $50 million, and it can only be assumed that at least $5 million of that is related to his recent sex tape lawsuit, in which a jury ordered him to fork over exactly that much to a Florida woman who claims he humiliated her by posting an online video of the two in flagrante delicto.

In happier news, Fiddy celebrated his birthday last week with a lavish bash at Harrah's in Atlantic City. Here's to hoping he did, in fact, party like it was his birthday, because there's not a lot more for him to celebrate these days.

2 'Hunger Games' star calls out Kylie Jenner

I love the smell of teenage celebrity Instagram feuds in the morning. It smells like … the future. So, in answer to the question we ask with surprising regularity — what did Kylie Jenner do this time? — this week it turns out to be, "Got cornrows." And another teenage famous-ish person — Amandla Stenberg, best known for dying tragically in the first "Hunger Games" movie — was not having it. Stenberg left this piquant comment on Jenner's Instagram post: "When you appropriate black features and culture but fail to use your position of power to help black Americans by directing attention toward your wigs instead of police brutality or racism," followed by the hashtag "white girls do it better." Ouch. The dig was enough to earn a response minutes later from Jenner: "Mad if I don't, mad if I do," she posted. "Go hang with Jaden or something." To be fair, I can understand why time spent with Jaden Smith would be considered punishment.

3 Bieber tries to undo butt-baring post

JUSTINBIEBER, INSTAGRAM

Sorry, Internet. Justin Bieber had a change of heart about flashing all of y'all. Five days after posting an Instagram of his bare tuchus that launched some pretty brilliant memes, Bieber deleted the photo and posted an apology along with a shot of him — from behind — fully dressed in trousers, a baggy jacket, a knitted cap and sunglasses. Basically a male pop star burqa. "Hey, I deleted the photo of my butt on Instagram not because I thought it was bad but someone close to me's daughter follows me and she was embarrassed that she saw my butt and I totally wasn't thinking in that aspect," he wrote. "And I felt awful that she felt bad." But by that rationale, shouldn't he delete all the music he's ever made? Doesn't he feel awful that I felt bad, too? Because I definitely felt bad hearing "Baby."

About that new 'Sherlock' teaser

There truly was something for every kind of geek at Comic-Con, including die-hard Cumberbitches. The folks at PBS debuted a tantalizing glimpse into the upcoming "Sherlock" Christmas special that takes Holmes (Benedict Cumberbatch), Watson (Martin Freeman) and Mrs. Hudson (Una Stubbs) and transports them back to the ace detective's Victorian origins. There are maddeningly few clues as to why they jumped away from modern times like that, but I don't really care. Even if it's some weird dream sequence, I wouldn't hate watching it.

4 Daniel Radcliffe pleased to be named 'Rear of the Year'

Speaking of butts! First of all, there's an annual award in the U.K. celebrating the best in British bums that's been going on for nearly 40 years. This feels like knowledge we all should've had already, but there you go. Anyway, this year's winner? None other than "Harry Potter" star Daniel Radcliffe, who's no stranger to baring his derriere on stage and in film since graduating from the kid-friendly wizarding franchise. "I've been campaigning for years," Radcliffe admitted to E! News at Comic-Con. "If you don't do it here in America, maybe my award counts kind of globally." Hehe, globally. He also offered a bit of an acceptance speech, promising to "get it out a lot more in the future." Cheers!

Asif Kapadia's acclaimed new documentary "Amy" features footage of the younger, pre-fame and much sunnier Amy Winehouse. / A24

Asif Kapadia didn't know much about Amy Winehouse before he made "Amy," the acclaimed new documentary about the late musician's life. In a way, that's a good thing: His film recreates what it's like to discover her for the first time. What you see is not the drug-addicted megastar who became a fixture of tabloids and late night one-liners. You see a funny, charismatic musical genius destroyed by a level of fame she never thought she could handle.

It's striking, especially for Americans who didn't know her until she was a tabloid fixture, to see the young, bubbly Amy Winehouse.

With Amy, the first thing that stood out in [manager Nick Shymansky]'s footage was how funny she was and just comfortable, happy. I showed a really early cut to some friends, and they all cried in the beginning. They didn't particularly cry at the ending because they knew how it ended. Afterwards, I asked why they were crying. They said, "Because we'd never seen her happy before." All everyone remembers was her in the latter stages, and in the U.S., that's all you saw. She was not the same person after she became famous. We wanted to show her doing really simple, mundane, ordinary things, so you realize she was this ordinary, down-to-earth, down-the-road girl and not put her on a pedestal and turn her into a megastar. Once that happens, people become less human and easier to make fun of, easier to attack.

The home movie footage creates a lot of intimacy.

What's interesting about Nick and her friend Lauren's material is it's really intimate. It's also something to do with the cameras they're using. They're not cameraphones. They're home video cameras, so you have to hold them up to your eye. If you hold it up to your eye, and you're talking to Amy, she's looking straight at us, into the lens. That's another level of intimacy. She's talking to the audience. We are the friend, we are Nick, we are Lauren, we are the husband, we are the paparazzi. The audience changes their point of view with Amy throughout the film.

With a little help from her friends

It wasn't easy to convince Winehouse's friends and family to help out on "Amy." But Nick Shymansky, her manager, found himself eager to help Kapadia out. "I was surprised by how unpushy Asif was," Shymansky says. "Everyone who had tried to talk to me had been very pushy. I wasn't sure about it at first. I found that Asif wasn't looking for a hook — he wasn't trying to get something done quickly. I was given time to come round. By the time I got into a recording booth, I felt I had a relationship with Asif — that this was the most comfortable I was ever going to feel getting into a booth and talking about Amy."

NINA SIMONE FINALLY GETS HER GREAT ARTIST DOC

Documentary

'What Happened, Miss Simone?'

Netflix Instant

Every great artist deserves a Great Artist doc, and the life of musician Nina Simone offers the usual grist: a genius equaled by turbulence in her personal life. But the demons that haunted Simone weren't the usual kind. Simone was a classical pianist who found herself crashing the charts with her eccentric twist on jazz/soul. When the civil rights era kicked into full swing, this unlikely (and reluctant) star found herself turning increasingly political. Director Liz Garbus doesn't exactly suggest Simone's politics getting in the way of her success is a bad thing, but she doesn't quite know how to handle these and other tricky subjects. If Garbus is still slightly in over her head, it's because Simone is just that fascinating.

The majority of the doc "What Happened, Miss Simone?" is filled with archival footage of musician Nina Simone. / NETFLIX

'Faults'

Netflix Instant

Mary Eilzabeth Winstead plays a woman whisked clumsily off to a motel room, where she'll be deprogrammed by a disgraced, flustered pro (Leland Orser), who's introduced trying to grift his way into a free hotel lunch. What starts off darkly funny slides into something more harrowing, but it's also a showcase for two actors who, especially on the basis of their work here, deserve to be in everything.

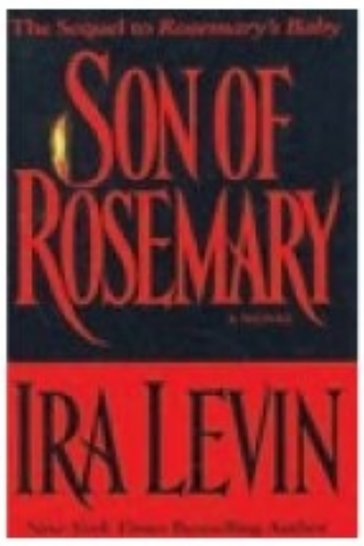
5 Classic books you never knew had sequels

Summer reading. These old favorites don't end after the last page.

With Harper's Lee's "Go Set a Watchman" hitting shelves today, you might wonder what other classics in American literature have also had their stories continued. From childhood favorites to canonical works, we've rounded up the sequels to five of the most popular reads of the last two centuries.

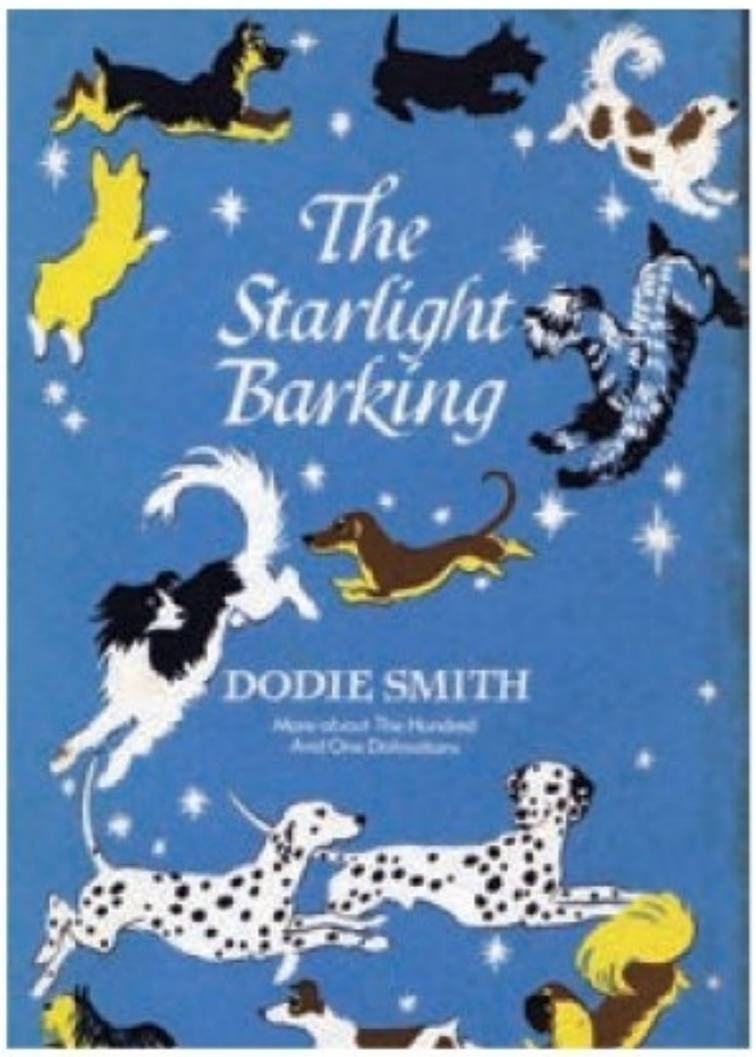
1 "Son of Rosemary" by Ira Levin
Sequel to: "Rosemary's Baby"
Year published: 1997



After 26 years in a coma, Rosemary awakens to find that her son Adrian is now an adult trying to do good in the world, despite his evil origins. But of course, things aren't that simple.

2 "The Starlight Barking" by Dodie Smith
Sequel to: "The Hundred and One Dalmatians"
Year published: 1967
This sequel puts a sci-fi spin on the classic tale of an English couple and their 101 dalmatians. Yes, seriously.

3 "Closing Time" by Joseph Heller
Sequel to: "Catch-22"
Year published: 1995
Fifty years after "Catch-22," "Closing Time" finds protagonist Yossarian as an old man at the end of his life in Manhattan. Readers can expect another stint in the hospital, Yossarian now working for Milo Minderbinder, Chaplain Tappman making an appearance, underground tunnels and the consistent theme of death in the characters' dialogues.



4 "Life at Plumfield With Jo's Boys, or Little Men" by Louisa May Alcott
Sequel to: "Little Women"
Year published: 1871
Set after the ending of "Little Women," "Little Men" follows second-eldest sister Jo and her husband Friedrich Bhaer as they run a school, mostly attended by young boys, at the Plumfield Estate, left to Jo by her Aunt March. We're introduced to Plumfield's students, among them orphans, street youth, Jo's sons Rob and Teddy and members of the Bhaer family, and we follow their interactions with each other and the world over the course of six months.

5 "Small Steps" by Louis Sachar
Sequel to: "Holes"
Year published: 2006
This sequel follows the post-Camp Greenlake adventures of Theodore "Armpit" Johnson as he tries to turn his life around following a scam gone wrong with fellow Tent D mate Rex "X-Ray" Washburn. In between evading the ringleaders of the scam and trying to clear his name, Armpit must also deal with his romantic feelings for an up-and-coming pop star and the true intentions of her greedy manager.

Rachel O'Hanlon-Rodriguez is Ana in "Lulu's Golden Shoes." / FLASHPOINT THEATRE COMPANY

Quoted

"It's my naughtiest, most embarrassing, most unflinching play, and also perhaps the most secretly personal." Quiara Alegria Hudes

Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright Quiara Alegria Hudes is best known for writing the book that served as the basis of "In the Heights," the Tony-winning musical set in New York City's Dominican-American Washington Heights neighborhood. But she actually grew up the daughter of Puerto Rican parents in West Philadelphia. Her rarely produced play "Lulu's Golden Shoes," which Flashpoint Theatre Company will present in its Philly premiere beginning this week, is set closer to home in the North Philly barrio.

"In the play," Hudes describes via email, "I turn North Philly into a fantastical dark comic book where girls and women are under attack at every turn and must share their wisdom with each other through secret means: hair braiding, dreams, a secret society buried underground in Philly's historic stream network/sewer system. I took some of the injustice in el barrio that I find deeply disturbing — deep poverty, unequal education, violence against women — and [personified] these social forces in two supervillains called The Alchemists. It's a wild take on my hometown."

While Hudes was inspired by comic books, she sees the play as a rebellion against the "fetishized women found in most Marvel comic books [who] never had to balance heroism with doing the dishes or puberty's foibles or breastfeeding in public."

Drawing on the comics of writer-illustrators like Lynda Barry and Alison Bechdel, she crafts an alternative superhero story as the sexual coming-of-age of a chubby teenage Latina. Her alter ego, Barrio Grrrl, struggles to overcome her botched attempts at superhero feats.

"This is my disgruntled postfeminist riot-grrrl tour de force where I skewer every stereotype of urban girls and women I can think of," she says. "I grew up in a matriarchal family full of women who suffered and who were brimming with humanity and divinity and who knew how to party. It's not a play for the faint of heart!"

Exposed

Homecoming

Despite her successes, Hudes admits to being nervous about bringing such a raw and deeply felt play to her hometown.

"It's nerve-wracking. I feel quite exposed. It's my naughtiest, most embarrassing, most unflinching play, and also perhaps the most secretly personal," she says. "And for those reasons, I said, 'What the hell — let's do it.' I didn't become a writer to feel comfortable, after all."

Women exhibiting eating disorder behaviors, Ages 18+

Drexel UNIVERSITY

Researchers at Drexel University and the University of Pennsylvania are seeking women engaging in eating disordered behaviors for a study funded by the National Institutes of Health. Women age 18 or older who have an eating problem that involves being too thin, binge eating, or both may be eligible for one of our studies. These studies examine the biological, behavioral, and neurological factors contributing to eating problems.

Eligible participants will visit Drexel and Penn four to five times over six months. Participation involves clinical interviews, completing questionnaires, and a blood draw. Depending on which study you participate in, you may also complete daily symptom recordings, a body scan, an fMRI scan, or an assessment of resting metabolic rate.

Compensation will be provided up to $500

MAKE HEALTHY YOUR NEW HAPPY

Shining the light on sunscreen

What you don't know about staying protected in the sun.

MARIANNE HAYES
@ MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Ever try to make sense of a sunscreen label? Unless you're a chemistry major, the ingredients leave most of us dumbfounded.

Now that summer is in full force, selecting the best sunblock for your outdoor activities is key to protecting your skin from sun damage. We checked in with Dr. Dendy Engelman of Manhattan Dermatology & Cosmetic Surgery about choosing the right formula for you.

What are my options?

Sunscreen falls into two categories: chemical blockers and physical blockers. Chemical blockers are ones that require a chemical reaction to occur before they can actually be effective.

"These are the sunscreens that, when you look at the label, have ingredients that sound significantly chemical-y and have very long names," says Engelman, adding that chemical blockers are considered safe for everyday use. "They go on very smoothly and are very transparent, so a lot of people like these."

But if it's strength you're after, physical blockers are superior. Unlike chemical-based varieties, these types of sunscreen sit on the surface of the skin to block the sun's dangerous effects. When scanning labels, look for elements like titanium dioxide and zinc oxide.

So why isn't everyone using physical blockers? According to Engelman, it all goes back to the old stereotype of the lifeguard on the beach with the white nose.

"The truth is that physical blockers do leave a little bit of a white sheen, even in the most micronized of particles," she says. "But more and more [researchers] are doing a beautiful job of reformulating the particle size."

How much SPF is enough?

Historically, it's been said that anything higher than SPF 15 isn't really making much of a difference. But Engelman says that reaching for a higher SPF isn't a bad idea. "We recommend wearing a minimum of SPF 30 or higher." Why? According to Engelman, most of us don't use the amount of sunscreen that's worn during studies with test subjects. So applying a normal amount of SPF 50, for example, is realistically only equivalent to an SPF 25 level of protection.

Try babying your skin

Looking for a gentle brand that still offers serious sun protection? Engelman advises babying your skin — literally.

"A lot of the baby versions of sunscreens are great, like Neutrogena's Pure & Free Baby and Blue Lizard's baby versions," she says. "If you're in the aisle at the drugstore and feeling overwhelmed, look at the baby versions. They tend to be more of the physical blockers and are great."

Reapplying is key

Once women have applied their makeup, most of them don't want to reapply sunscreen throughout the day. Engelman suggests powder blockers, many of which come in a variety of shades to match your skin tone. Simply dust it on and go.

"These are amazing," she says. "You can keep them in your purse — travel with them. You just shake the powder onto the brush and apply it. It's perfect because it's not greasy, but it still protects your skin."

Take your exercise from solo to social

Working out with a friend is a proven way to actually get up off your butt. Making a commitment to each other gives you both a reason to get out of bed, skip the office doughnuts and even use the workout as a chance to strengthen your bond.

The problem is that life happens, leaving you with an apologetic text message while stretching for a 5-mile run that suddenly seems a lot longer and lonelier without your workout buddy by your side.

Enter Jaha (the name means "chase"), a new app that makes exercise a more social experience. Your profile goes beyond a standard bio to include fitness-focused stats like stride length as well as a description of the workout you're looking to partner up for, whether it's running, tennis, cycling or something else. Then, by swiping right or left a la Tinder, you can find a fitness partner.

Jaha has a built-in step counter, which it uses to fine-tune matches based on fitness level. Keep track of your progress and challenge others through the app to spur you on — even if you can't find a partner in real life that day, there's a community of users to keep you motivated.

With Jaha, you'll never have an excuse for not working out because you got stood up. We're sorry/you're welcome.

Are you miscast in your own life?

Who's calling the shots on the movie set of your life? ISTOCK

In the movie "Stranger Than Fiction," Harold Crick is a robotic IRS agent who begins to question his mundane existence when he hears a mysterious voice narrating his life and foreshadowing his death. When he discovers that he is not the master of his own destiny, but rather a fictional character, Crick tracks down his author and convinces her to rewrite the ending of his story.

While both strange and fictional, Crick's journey speaks to our capacity to question the roles we play and the scripts we've been given and reclaim our personal narratives.

Sometimes the roles we play and their societally prescribed scripts don't really serve us. Yet we keep acting them out simply because we've become accustomed to the motions and memorized our lines.

Often, we come by these roles and scripts honestly enough. According to behavioral psychology, we begin to assimilate scripts as young children, when we are most susceptible to messages both from our life as well as the fictional examples in movies and television shows. Many of us continue to be influenced throughout our lifetimes by scripts without questioning whether they make sense, who's really writing them and whether or not we're right for the roles we've taken on.

Familial expectations and societal values may lead us to choose a career, lifestyle or partner that is out of sync with our authentic talents and interests. If you're not the one calling the shots, then pull a Harold Crick and convince the powers that be to let you change the plot.

A poorly written script of internalized negative messages can be just as harmful. If your internal monologue consists of lines like, "You'll never succeed at anything," or "I must do everything perfectly or not at all," it may prevent you from stepping into and mastering roles that highlight your natural abilities.

Chucking out the script and starting over can be daunting, especially if you're several chapters (or maybe even halfway) through your story. But it's never too late — otherwise, you risk living a fictitious life that will leave you feeling like a stranger to your authentic self.

To find out whether you're playing the right parts, it's time to interrogate your screenwriter.

MURRAY IS AN NFL SUPERSTAR, WE SHOULD TREAT HIM AS SUCH

DeMarco Murray is due for a monster 2015 season, says Glen Macnow. / GETTY IMAGES

Opinion

GLEN MACNOW

REALGLENMACNOW

Glen Macnow has been an outspoken voice in Philly sports for nearly three decades.

If a superstar joins your team, and no one hears about it, does it count? I'm stretching a point here. Of course you heard about DeMarco Murray signing with the Eagles in the spring. You just haven't thought about it since then.

Well, you should. Because the NFL's other players have.

We have never been an understated fan base. When prime-time stars from Terrell Owens to Moses Malone to Eric Lindros to Roy Halladay relocated here, we held rallies and pinched ourselves with delight. "He likes us, he really likes us," we marveled, as Cliff Lee chose the Phillies over the Evil Yankee Empire.

But not so much with Murray, who ditched the satanic Jerry Jones to wear Eagles green. By the way, all Murray did last season was rush for 1,845 yards — 484 more than the next guy. In fact, he ran for more yards than 20 other entire teams in the NFL.

His colleagues noticed. When the NFL Network's rankings of the top 100 players clicked down last week, there was Murray at No. 4. In other words, his fellow players ranked him behind only J.J. Watt, Aaron Rodgers and Tom Brady. He is, his peers say, the No. 1 running back in football.

And we yawned. Didn't even cause a ripple on WIP. What gives?

There are factors at work here. Obviously, we will grow more excited about Murray and the Eagles when training camp opens in a few weeks. Most of the attention now is going to the Phillies' horrific rotation and Joel Embiid's peanut-brittle foot.

Plus, Murray's relocation got lost in the high drama of Chip Kelly's power grab, the Foles-for-Bradford trade, LeSean McCoy's bitter departure and Tim Tebow's levitation act. The Eagles are far and away the league's biggest story this offseason, and that's without Riley Cooper acting the ass at a Kenny Chesney concert.

I know there is skepticism about Murray. First off, ex-Cowboys have never done well here (hello, Chris Boniol). Second, Murray replacing McCoy is not quite the same upgrade as, say, T.O. replacing James Thrash back in 2004.

And fans are nervous that Murray had a whopping 449 touches last season, the sixth-highest single-season number in NFL history. We've all heard the trope that runners experience dramatic drop-off after such a work-intensive season. And it's true — although Eric Dickerson, LaDainian Tomlinson and Ricky Watters (as an Eagle) can all make good arguments to the other side.

I predict Murray will be the Eagles' offensive MVP in 2015. Those Cowboy-fan ninnies who attribute his greatness to running behind Dallas' offensive line will swallow their words as he rushes for 150 yards in Week 2 against you-know-who. This holiday season, the most popular jersey in town will be No. 29.

Trust me, we'll be shouting about our latest superstar. By then, the Phils' starting staff will be a faded memory.

MLB

The stars will be present in Cincy tonight

The National League remains in the lead in the all-time MLB All-Star Game series, owning a 43-40 advantage. But the American League has been doing some serious damage since the beginning of this century and, more specifically, since the new rule that the winning league of each year's Midsummer Classic would earn homefield advantage in that year's World Series.

The Junior Circuit won seven games in a row from 2003-2009. The NL bounced back with three consecutive wins from 2010-12 before the AL won in each of the last two years. So since the homefield advantage rule was implemented, the American League has hosted nine World Series while the National League has hosted just three times.

Cincinnati's Great American Ball Park will host the 86th MLB All-Star Game Tuesday (7:30 p.m., FOX) with Houston's Dallas Keuchel (11-4, 2.23 ERA) getting the start for the AL and the Dodgers' Zack Greinke (8-2, 1.39 ERA) getting the nod for the NL.

The Angels' Mike Trout and Albert Pujols highlight the AL lineup. GETTY IMAGES

Multiple Royals (Lorenzo Cain, Salvador Perez, Alcides Escobar) and multiple Angels (Mike Trout, Albert Pujols) will be in Ned Yost's AL starting lineup while Bruce Bochy's NL lineup is a little more diverse. Washington's Bryce Harper will hit out of the three-hole with Arizona's Paul Goldschmidt hitting clean-up.

Last year's 5-3 AL victory at Target Field in Minnesota had some controversy as St. Louis pitcher Adam Wainwright admitted that he gave the retiring Derek Jeter some easy pitches to hit.

FSU players banned from bars

Facing mounting pressure to do something (anything) to prevent his players from further harming themselves and others, Florida State head football coach Jimbo Fisher will not allow his players to go out to bars and locations that serve alcohol, according to the Tallahassee Democrat. This offseason, two Florida State players have been arrested and charged with misdemeanor battery for allegedly punching women. The FSU football program had already been under a microscope after former quarterback Jameis Winston was accused of sexual assault.

Cornhusker connection

MLB. The Phillies have plenty of Nebraska pride.

Darin Ruf jumps into the arms of Cody Asche after a Phillies' walkoff win in June. / GETTY IMAGES

They're still sporting those familiar red and white colors. But for Cody Asche, Jake Diekman and Darin Ruf — not only teammates and good friends but Cornhuskers through and through — their loyalty shifts in the spring and summer from Nebraska to the Phillies.

Like the rest of the Phils, they've struggled at times this painful season — each needing a stint in the minors to resuscitate their respective games. But now the Cornhusker Three have been reunited, leaning on each other through the hard times as well as the good.

"It's definitely been, no pun intended, an up-and-down year for all of us," said the 24-year-old Asche, who grew up in St. Louis before attending Nebraska, eventually making a home in Lincoln, where he trains in the offseason with Diekman. "But we're good friends and continue to pull for each other," he said.

"It's a small world. Ruf was actually my host when I went on a recruiting trip to Creighton. Our wives are good friends, too," he added.

In fact, Darin and Libby Ruf housed a number of Phillies last October before Cody and Angela tied the knot.

"A lot of our teammates came in on Friday and spent the night at our house in Omaha," said Ruf, who was unsuccessful as a recruiter but later became friends with Asche when they played at Reading in 2012.

"I played against him in college and knew who he was. I didn't know Jake until my first spring training, then we played together in Lakewood. And [former Phillie] Tyler Cloyd was from Omaha, so at one point, there were four of us," Ruf said.

Pigskin obsessed

"Saturdays during the [baseball] offseason are the best days ever. ... The month between the end of the [football] regular season and start of the bowl season is the worst month ever."

Jake Diekman

Still, the odds of Ruf, Asche and Diekman all winding up here had to be staggering. "It's cool to have a couple of guys from that state here," said Asche, whose claim that he once saw Ruf hit a walkoff homer in the College World Series in Omaha has just one flaw. "I never played in the College World Series," laughed Ruf.

"There aren't too many of us [Nebraskans] in the league," continued Asche. "I think everyone looked up to Alex Gordon."

Long before Gordon, there was a certain Hall of Fame Phillie from Tilden, Nebraska. Yet until they got here, none of them had any idea Richie Ashburn was a fellow Cornhusker. They've learned that and have become more comfortable since coming here, but it will never be quite like home.

"I don't like big cities. Big cities are too stressful," said Diekman. "I'd rather see 15 mules in front of me, so I'll probably never leave Nebraska."
